Island Outpost

On a remote corner of Shelter Island, architect Steve Schappacher and designer Rhea White make a live-work fantasy come to life

For years, interior designer Rhea White and architect Steve Schappacher lived and worked in Manhattan and spent weekends on Shelter Island. But once they were on the island, they found it increasingly difficult to leave. "We dreaded Sunday nights," recalls Schappacher. "And pretty soon, Sunday nights turned into Monday nights, and then Tuesday nights." The summer before they became permanent residents, they spent only seven or eight nights in the city, so "we decided to refocus and move to the island full time."

"Between our mortgage payment and the parking garage payment and everything else," White adds, "we were spending around $2,600 a night. We could get a kick-ass hotel room for $2,600 a night!" Even so, White remained apprehensive about the move at first, not fully committed to the idea of not living in the city. "To this day, half our garage

The Anthropologie canopy bed in the master suite (THIS SPREAD) is dressed with a linen duvet and throw; the lamps are from Restoration Hardware. The master bath includes a Victoria + Albert tub, a Kallista tub filler, and a Calacatta Gold marble vanity. See Resources.
