TAKING SHELTER

Talk about Victorian drama! On a rise of Shelter Island filled with circa-1900 summer cottages, Dick Tarlow and Kristin Kehrberg build a contemporary upstart

HAVING NATURE BECOME THE FOCUS WAS COMPELLING TO US” and chunky and a little formidable—once he placed the piece, it’s not moving! But in such a big, open space, it can be really grounding.” The kitchen, which lies adjacent to the open living room and dining area, is a minimalist jewel, with “everything hidden away”—from the coffee maker to the toaster—“so that it just feels like it’s seamlessly integrated.”

Despite the vast walls of glass and stone and crisp, clean lines, the place is anything but a monastery. Rather, it’s a welcoming backdrop for the couple’s energetic, eclectic art collection. Finds from their travels in Africa, India, and Thailand—including Buddha statues, which Tarlow says he’s drawn to because of their calm, serene appeal, and “not so much as a religious thing”—mix with quirky displays including a World War II machine gun and a Russian Ural

Escape Plans

The master bedroom (ABOVE) includes a tufted Adler bed frame from Restoration Hardware, velvet-covered swivel chairs, and a marble side table from India. The tub in the master bath (NEAR LEFT) is by Victoria + Albert and the faucet fittings are from Dornbracht. Limestone pavers lead to an outdoor shower with VRH fixtures (OPPOSITE). See Resources.
