1 Brooklyn-based homeware brand Bungalo has introduced the Ceramic Water Jerry can, ideally suited for watering plants, but also as a functional, artful tabletop piece or garden accessory. Inspired by Japanese and Scandinavian simplicity, the simply designed can comes in white, sage and light gray ($98 each).

2 Designed by Dwell Studio for Global Views, the stately Swirl bookends mount curved, polished brass to a marble slab with delicate amber veining for an ultimately refined, modern statement ($499).

3 The new Wave Collection of knobs and pulls from Du Verre showcases compelling sculptural compositions that capture the fluid movement of the sea. Crafted from recycled aluminum, the hand-finished hardware is offered in satin nickel, antique brass and oil-rubbed bronze finishes.

4 Kikkerland reinvents the classic French press with a minimalist twist. The new Ora press features a double-walled glass body to keep in heat and understated cork stopper in keeping with the contemporary design ($60).

5 Harmann & Forbes extends their lineup of handcrafted, woven-to-size grass-weave window coverings with the introduction of Elements. The natural offering presents a richly refined linen-like textile in soothing, sophisticated colorways.
