in the garden for the owners. Though beautiful just as ornament, it's meant as a tool for meditation and enlightenment. "They were very interested in stimulating their senses," Lang says. "Usually people talk about plants and patios. They thought more about feelings and what the space meant to them."

Indeed, although this is a house of sumptuous beauty born from crisp detailing and subtle elegance, its greatest quality may be its sense of harmony. "Everything's centered and relates from one space to another," Franky says. "That's always the fun challenge." L
