This Photo Even though this home's layout was kept mostly intact, renovator Danny Lipford took the project down to the studs and introduced fresh style.

New Episode

The revival of an American classic yields dramatic results.

BY PAULA MARSHALL PHOTOGRAPHY BY JOHN BESSLER PRODUCED BY JOSEPH BOEHM, LACEY HOWARD, AND MOLLY REID SINNETT

Left Although all new, details in the master suite reflect the existing house. For example, architect Pete Vallas made the back wall a bowed-out bay similar to the one in the dining room. Below A soaking tub adds to the spa feel of the master bath. Opposite Colors and patterns reflect the home's proximity to the water—soothing blues and greens and botanical prints.

shifts through the day, and those shifts show up in other rooms: an invigorating green for the kitchen and family room, a soothing blue in the master suite, and a delightful lavender in the hall and stairway space. Fabrics follow the same path, from subdued hues in the living room and master suite to bolder colors and prints in the family room, plus glam wallpaper in the main hall.

Furniture is mostly from the Better Homes and Gardens Collection® from Universal Furniture. Boehm chose pieces from several lines to customize the look: the dining room table and chairs are from three different lines but share classic features that accent the home's casual Southern feel. "I didn't want the house to look like a showroom, and I wanted people to see how easy it is to mix and match," he says.

The team went through several kitchen designs and debated the inclusion of seating area. The resolution: A long island that accommodates everything from homework to dining. The clean-line cabinets in white and dark wood respect the home's classic style while accommodating modern taste. It's that balance of old and new that Lipford loves. "As people walk through, I love it when someone asks, 'Where's the old and where's the new?' Perfect."
