

Friday, July 22, 2016 | heraldtribune.com

at home

Your guide to living in style

Scott Mann created the original Fender Lounge using a fender from a Peterbilt semi-truck. Models made with new, modified fenders from Peterbilt start at $3,000.

BRITTANY APP, APPS PHOTOGRAPHY

A GLIMPSE OF THE FUTURE

Nine notable innovations from a design show

E4

AT HOME WITH MARNI

Succulents are a hot item with the younger crowd. E6

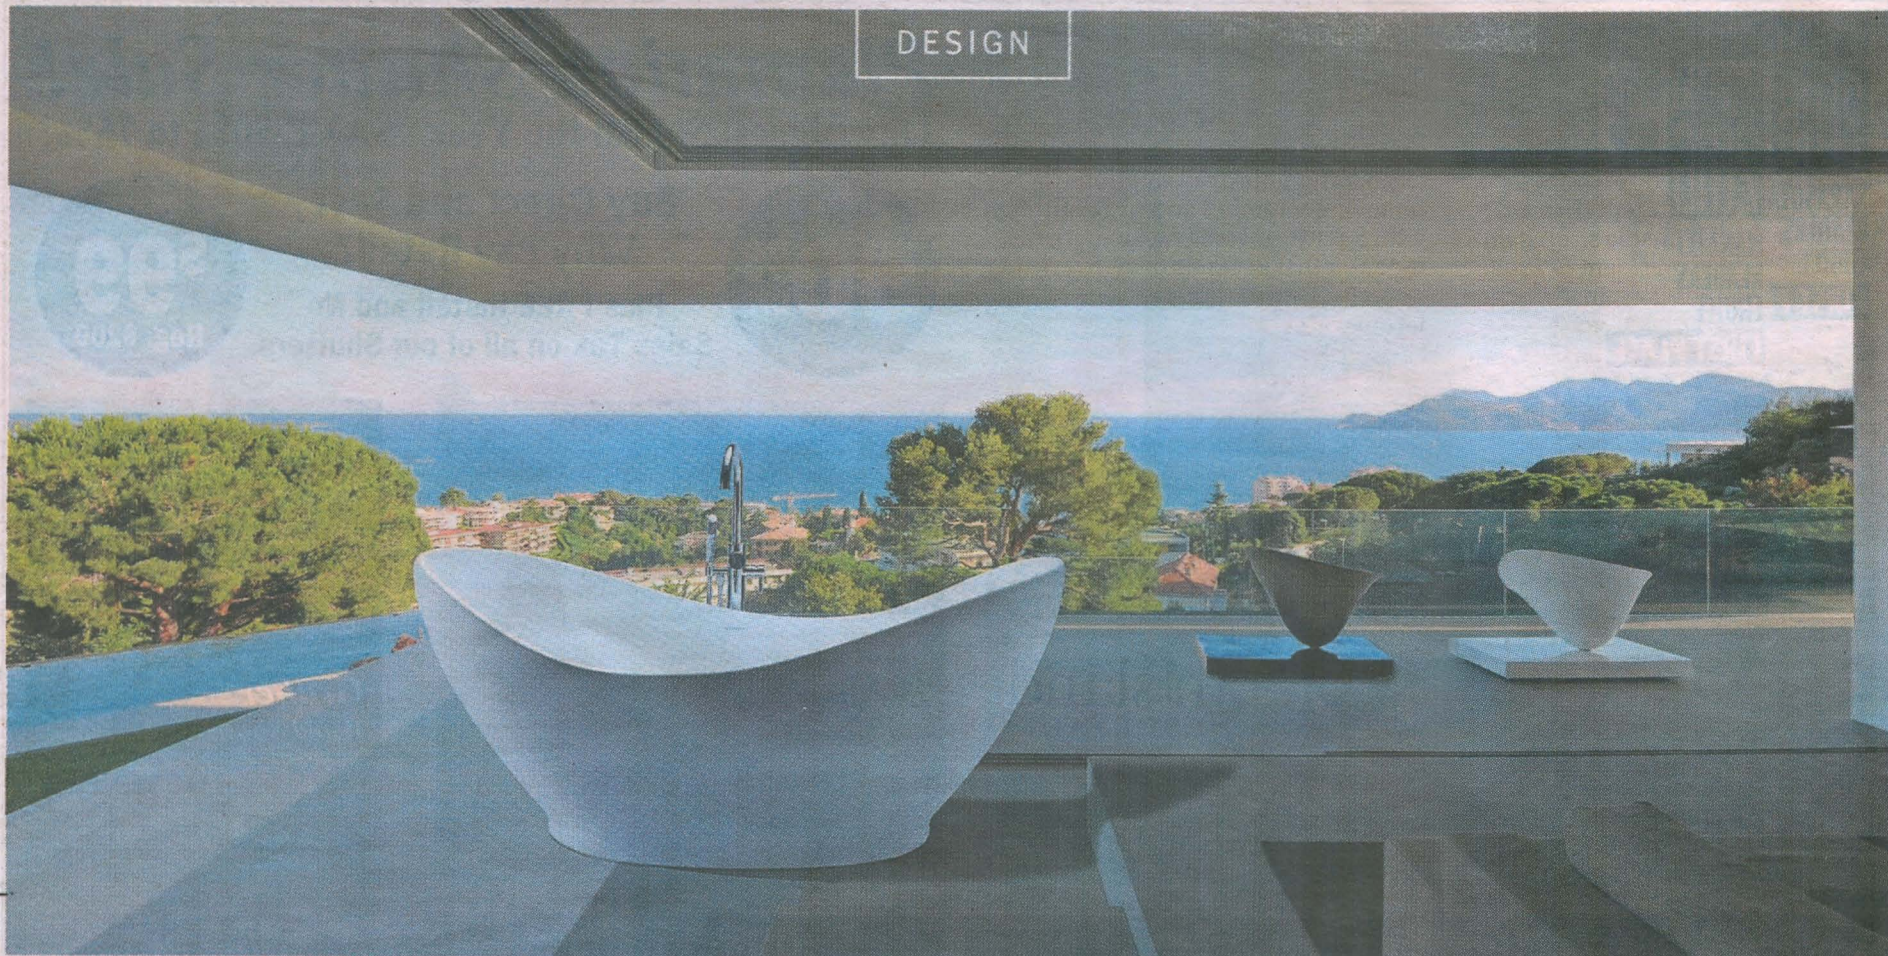

HOME ORGANIZATION

Keeping track of your repairs will save you work later. E9

ARTS & CRAFTS

After storm, trees are given new life as furniture. E10

DESIGN

MTI's Juliet soaking tub is made from engineered solid stone in matte white or biscuit and offers an optional air bath feature ($7,275-$11,075). MTI BATHS

A GLIMPSE OF THE FUTURE

NINE NOTABLE INNOVATIONS FROM A DESIGN SHOW

By Bonnie McCarthy
The Washington Post

Contemporary design devotees circled their (sleek, WiFi-enabled) wagons at the annual Dwell on Design show in downtown Los Angeles late last month to commune with like-minded souls and synthesize a vision of what modern means today.

Presented by Dwell Media and the editors at Dwell magazine, the event invited design enthusiasts and industry professionals to "step into our pages" via an extensive showcase of products, demonstrations, house tours, panel discussions and workshops. The future was definitely on display. Here are nine influences to note:

1. Dwell.com

In an ambitious move to compete with websites such as Houzz, Pinterest, Instagram and popular blogging platforms, Dwell Media took advantage of the show's audience to preview a newly transformed website. Dwell president Michela O'Connor Abrams called the new Dwell.com "contextualized commerce."

Abrams said readers want more than an online version of printed material — they want to connect, shop, write, share, discuss and ogle in real time. In addition to accessing editorial features written by Dwell staffers, users create an online profile, "follow" friends and influencers, share pictures, blog their own "stories," vet design professionals and shop.

SEE FUTURE, E5

California lighting designers at Konzept previewed Mr. Go!, a sleek, rechargeable LED lantern designed by Edmund Ng. The happy-looking lamp, perfect for glamping and pool parties, will be available in 2017. KONCEPT