LOOKING AT THE glamorous touches and fixtures that now adorn this custom bath, you would never imagine the complete overhaul that recently took place. While many design projects are sparked by a desire for a fresh start, this gut was partly necessitated by a serious leak and mold problem. Designer Jaime Galapo of Allied Kitchen and Bath not only found ingenious ways to prevent this problem from resurfacing, but she also did so without losing points on style or panache.

To combat the mold, the team first installed a Schluter system in the shower, which completely envelops the space, preventing water leakage. An exhaust system was also installed to keep the space cool and dry. Once the mold challenge was overcome, the team transformed the bath into the mecca of style and relaxation. The shower features a steam unit complete with chromatherapy and aromatherapy options, and a built-in bench completes the spa-like feel. When the homeowners prefer to opt for a bath, they can now luxuriate in the comfort of a freestanding tub, which doubles as a sculptural art piece in the space.

Since the homeowners wanted to move away from the traditional look of the existing bath and toward a contemporary style that was more suited to their tastes, Galapo decided to draw upon the espresso wood colors that run throughout the rest of the home, adding in touches of gray and white. Contemporary crystal sconces and a chandelier were added to give the bath a glamorous, feminine touch. His and her vanities and toilets allow the homeowners to share the space comfortably, and LED lights line the bottom of the vanities for added soft lighting that sets a relaxing mood. «
