A Touch of Glass

SEEKING TO CREATE an innovative kitchen in synch with green principals, designers Elina Katsioulas-Beall, CKD, MFA, of DeWitt Designer Kitchens, Inc., and Sarah Michalowski, CKD, turned to nature for its design inspiration: a quiet waterfall cascading down through rocks to a basin.

This idea dictated material choices. Glass and polished stainless steel mirror water's clear, reflective qualities, so their "waterfall" was created with a vertical, watery glass piece that flows down to a stainless steel sink through a tailored mass of grey rocks. The natural crannies of the wall offer storage with stainless steel niches. Glass accessories represent water splashes settling in those crevices. The earth is symbolized in sustainable, reddish brown perimeter cabinetry and a reconstituted rosewood veneer island. The island's thick, textured glass counter on polished stainless steel looks like a small pool of water and pours down to form a round table.

All glass is illuminated from within, and LED, recessed low-voltage halogens, and pendants round out the lighting. The curved soffit and hood soften the composition's rectangles, and the dishwasher is disguised with a three-drawer panel. Well thought out in terms of form, function, and eco-friendliness, this nature-inspired design looks high class with its touch of glass. Learn more about this designer at www.dewittdesignerkitchens.com. «
