ALICE WELSH DOYLE

Gray-green cabinetry (Treron by Farrow & Ball) brings contrast to the kitchen's knotty wood paneling.

OPPOSITE TOP: Rattan chairs (Mainly Baskets Home) and a sea grass wallcovering (Cowtan & Tout) ground this seating area's parade of prints.

OPPOSITE BOTTOM: The whimsical red-and-blue foyer. Antique Serab rug, Tony Kitz Gallery an ornate mirror entirely in shed antlers, which sits above the mantel. As a family home, it needed to function well, calling for generously scaled, comfortable sofas and chairs, “and believe it or not, there are a lot of performance fabrics in the mix,” notes Sikes.

There is a beautiful order to it all. “I think the magic of playing with so much texture and novelty is the repetition of things, whether it’s using the same fabric in different places or linking pieces together with trim and other detailing,” adds the designer. Delft tiles appear in both the kitchen backsplash and powder room wainscot, and “we sprinkled blue-and-white plates everywhere as another common thread,” he says. “Some people might be somewhat scared to layer all of this together, but these clients had no trepidation when it came to color and texture.”

It’s a fearlessness wrapped in warmth, and it greets guests on arrival. The foyer is painted in four Farrow & Ball colors—two shades of red for the ceiling and craftsman-style paneling, a faded blue on the Dutch door, and a brighter blue for the chair rail. “The millwork Mark designed is so highly detailed and beautiful, and it feels original to the house,” says the homeowner. Indeed there’s an ageless quality throughout. “We plan to live in this house a long time, and we were not looking to do anything trendy that will look dated down the road. It’s classic but executed in a way that still feels fresh and new.” ♦
