DESIGNER HOLLY HUNT RETURNS TO THE COMPANY SHE CREATED FOR A SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY COLLECTION

Although she sold the company in 2014, Holly Hunt, the designer, recently made a return visit to Holly Hunt, the brand, in honor of the latter's 40th anniversary. The reason? HH40, a new collection of furniture and lighting created in collaboration with Holly Hunt's studio team led by Creative Director Jo Annah Kornak. "HH40 was a joy," says Hunt, who now spearheads House of Hunt. "When I opened the first showroom 40 years ago, I didn't have a business plan, but I had a vision. This collection embodies that vision and pushes it further. It celebrates the expansive possibilities of modern design."

With silhouettes that range from refined and architectural to organic and sensual, HH40 covers sofas, lounge chairs, cocktail tables, a bedroom series, dining tables, lighting, and various types of accessories. "It was an extraordinary collaboration," says Kornak. "We worked closely with Holly to transform ideas and concepts into pieces that function as a perfectly articulated detail in the story of how clients live."

BATHROOM GLAMOUR

There seems to be a shift in bathroom design as of late. Spa-inspired minimalism has given way to understated (and, sometimes, not so understated) glamour, and with that come curvy shapes, statement lighting, and eye-catching accessories. The new Tayla from MTI Baths certainly qualifies. The freestanding tub has a graceful oval silhouette enhanced by a flat trim and an unexpected square-patterned texture on the exterior that adds dimension and visual interest. As an added plus, the tub is ergonomically designed to fit two bathers comfortably and its cast stone construction provides insulating properties that keep water warmer longer. Indulgent bubble baths just got way more enticing. mtibaths.com
